

Moneyverse Data Usage Agreement

Demo Prototype · v1.0

What this covers

This is a short prototype build created for a financial-literacy game demo. It is not a production banking product, and no real money, account, or financial transaction is created, held, or transferred at any point while you play.

Why Moneyverse helps you

Moneyverse turns everyday money habits — saving, budgeting, spotting a good deal, understanding how interest works — into a game you actually want to keep playing, instead of a lecture. You practice real decisions in a safe, simulated city before they matter for real:

- Learn by doing — mini-games and story conversations put money concepts into a decision you actually make, not just a fact you read.
- Practice without risk — every choice happens in the game's own economy, so there's no real money on the line while you're still learning.
- Builds at your pace — your companion and the story adjust to what you've already shown you understand, instead of assuming everyone starts at the same place.
- Makes the first step easier — by the time a real decision (like opening a savings account) comes up, it's a familiar idea, not a cold ask.

What we collect

Data	Purpose
Display name / avatar choice	Shown in-game and on shareable badges you choose to publish
In-game progress (quests, coins, streak)	Saved so your session can resume where you left off
Quiz responses and attempt counts	Helps tailor question difficulty to you
Basic usage events (e.g. button taps)	For feedback on your experience with the game

How it's used

Data listed above is used only to run this demo experience and for feedback on your experience with the game. It is not sold, and it is not shared with advertisers.

Your choices

Participation is voluntary. You may stop playing at any time. Badges you choose to publish or share are shared at your own discretion — nothing is posted or sent anywhere on your behalf without an explicit action from you (e.g. tapping "Publish & Share").

This document is provided for the purpose of this demo build only and is not a legally binding agreement.